

Pregnancy complicated by idiopathic central diabetes insipidus and oligohydramnios

Karin Imaizumi¹, Shun Yasuda², Naoya Toba¹, Toma Fukuda³, Makiho Ishibashi¹, Fumihiro Ito¹, Takayuki Okazaki⁴, Tsuyoshi Murata⁵, Aya Kanno², H. Kyojuka², Akiko Yamaguchi³, and Keiya Fujimori²

¹Iwase General Hospital

²Fukushima Medical University School of Medicine

³Fukushima Medical University School of Medicine Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology

⁴Okazaki OB/GYN Clinic

⁵Affiliation not available

January 23, 2021

Abstract

Maternal diabetes insipidus does not usually adversely affect the course of pregnancy. We present a rare case of central diabetes insipidus diagnosed at 31 weeks of gestation with fetal oligohydramnios successfully treated with intranasal desmopressin. To date, only three cases of diabetes insipidus with oligohydramnios have been reported.

Hosted file

Manuscript0105cDI.pdf available at <https://authorea.com/users/391277/articles/505438-pregnancy-complicated-by-idiopathic-central-diabetes-insipidus-and-oligohydramnios>