

Commentary: The bidirectional Glenn procedure can be useful in palliating late presenting patients with complex congenital heart disease

John Lamberti¹

¹Stanford University

May 29, 2021

Abstract

The authors successfully utilize the bidirectional Glenn procedure to palliate late presenting, cyanotic patients with complex congenital heart disease. Additional information regarding preoperative diagnostic testing would be helpful. There is little information regarding patient screening and selection for the procedure. The short term results are satisfactory, however, mid-term and longer follow-up data is lacking. The treatment algorithm suggested by the report might be useful in other settings.

Hosted file

Commentary05 28.doc available at <https://authorea.com/users/416628/articles/524095-commentary-the-bidirectional-glenn-procedure-can-be-useful-in-palliating-late-presenting-patients-with-complex-congenital-heart-disease>