

Isolated unilateral axillary lymphadenopathy diagnosed in a teenager by ultrasonography after BNT162b2 COVID-19 vaccination

TAKAYUKI YAMADA¹ and Susumu Ohwada²

¹Asunaro Clinic

²ASKOHWADA consultation clinic

September 25, 2021

Abstract

Axillary lymphadenopathy is a local reaction to mRNA COVID-19 vaccination. A 19-year-old healthy woman presented with a mass in the axilla diagnosed by ultrasonography as vaccine-induced hyperreactive lymphadenopathy. After two weeks, ultrasonography revealed that the lymph node had shrunk and that the blood flow signal in the hilum had disappeared.

Hosted file

COVID_vaccine_\begin{CJK}\UTF8\gbsn\end{CJK}\selectlanguage{english}rinpa\begin{CJK}\UTF8\gbsn\end{CJK} available at <https://authorea.com/users/419086/articles/538912-isolated-unilateral-axillary-lymphadenopathy-diagnosed-in-a-teenager-by-ultrasonography-after-bnt162b2-covid-19-vaccination>

